Eastern Union AGM -26 September

The meeting supported the motion that the Executive Committee calls an Extraordinary General Meeting to wind up the Eastern Union, and approved that on the same day, immediately following the EGM, there is a conversation about how best to network our congregations in East Anglia'. The EGM will be on 12 March in Ipswich.

James Barry addressed the meeting on the use of technology and how we should embrace it if we want to let the public that we exist. In the case of Cambridge he was talking to the converted, as in the past year we have set up a wonderful website.

Cambridge Festival of Ideas 2015

For the first time, our church will be hosting an event during this annual festival.

On Wednesday 28 October, 7.30-9.30pm, our minister, Andrew Brown, and Green Party politician and academic, Professor Rupert Read, will introduce an evening conversation on 'religion after the death of God', chaired by Professor Stephen Watson.

In 1882, Friedrich Nietzsche announced 'the death of God', signalling that an important change was occurring in the religious and philosophical form of life that had prevailed across Europe for centuries and, today, we know that for many people foundationalist conceptions of God have become increasingly implausible.

This evening is an introduction to the possibilities that have opened up for religion as a result of this process. As Mark Wrathall notes in his introduction to Religion after Metaphysics (Cambridge University Press 2003 p. 1), 'the loss of belief in a metaphysical god that is the ground of all existence and intelligibility, and even the loss of belief in a creator God who produced the heaven and the earth is not a disaster' and that the 'absence of foundational God opens up access to richer and more relevant ways for us to understand creation and for us to encounter the divine and the sacred. Thus, the death of the philosopher's God may have provided us with new and more authentic possibilities for understanding religion that we blocked by traditional metaphysical theology (or onto-theology)'.

Rupert Read's book Philosophy for Life (Continuum, 2007) in part explores the associated subject of religion without belief.

Life of the Church meeting:
Wednesday 21 October: 7.30-9.30pm

All members and friends of the church are invited to an open 'Life of the Church' meeting on Wednesday 21 October. Our minister is taking a sabbatical next year and we need input from the congregation. The evening will be a chance for the church committee to outline their ideas for the sabbatical, and how members of the congregation can be involved. What suggestions for themes, visiting preachers, or activities do you have for the 4 months when Andrew is away?

The Unitarian movement in the UK is quite small and its future may seem rather uncertain. Believe it or not, we are one of the larger congregations. It's been said that 'Small is beautiful', but small can also be problematical.

We need to ask ourselves what is our vision for our religious movement, both here in Cambridge and throughout the UK. Our General Assembly published Vision for the Future which brings together some ideas for the future of our movement. There are short contributions from Unitarians all over the UK, including our minister emeritus, Frank Walker. On 21 October, we hope to have a conversation about our individual and communal sense of vision for our church. Vision for the Future can be read online at: <https://www.unitarian.org.uk/news/vision-our-future>

We have a few printed copies for those who don't have internet access.
